LONG TERMS IN PARLIAMENT.

RECORDS THAT EXCEED THOSE OF OUR CONGRESS.

Due Largely to the Early Age at Which Englishmen Enter House of Commons and to the Fact That They Do Not Lose

WASHINGTON, March 15 .- The long timers in the American Congress, striking as they are, are outranked both in number and time by the English Parliamentary tenures. Some of the British records make even the long services of Senators Morrill, Allison and Sherman look commonplace.

William Ewart Gladstone made a continuous parliamentary record of sixty-six years. He was Prime Minister twice, and held various subordinate administrative offices under other Premiers. Nevertheless. while holding these places he continued to be a member of the House of Commons, to which he was first elected in 1832, when but 23 years old.

This is where the English legislator has a distinct advantage over his American cousin. He can enter the Commons as a mere boy. He does not have to relinquish his place in the House to accept an administrative position. Gladstone's was a long political career, but it was not an unusual one in English annals. He represented the University of Oxford for eighteen consecutive years.

Lord Palmerston was for fifty-eight years continuously a member of Parliament. He entered the Commons at 23, and for twenty consecutive years represented the other great English university, Cambridge. He was Premier of England twice. For nineteen years he was continuously Secretary of War under five different administrations He was Secretary of State twenty-five

Sir Robert Peel was elected to the House of Commons when but 21, and was continucusty a member of that body for fifty-seven years. He was three times Prime Minister. and almost continuously for forty years an

Lord John Russell also entered the House one at 21 and served continuously in that and the House of Lords for sixty-five years. He was in office two-thirds of the time and Premier twice.

Gladstone's great rival, Benjamin Disraeli, did not get into the House of Commons until he was 32, having been defeated in several previous trials. At first derided and hooted down, he eventually became leader of the House and was Prime Minister twice. His parliamentary career lasted only forty-four years. E. J. Smith-Stanley, afterward Lord Derby, was elected to the House of Commons at 22. and was in Parliament forty-six years continuously. He was Prime Minister three times

Sir Robert Walpole, to go further afield, entered the House at 25 and held various offices, among them the Premiership twice, the last time for twenty-two years conrinuously, when he resigned and was created Earl of Orford. He was in Parliament forty-four years.

These do not exhaust the list. They are cited because they are familiar names to Americans. Their extreme youth upon entering the Commons is a remarkable feature of these cases. Doubtless more than a thousand men have served in Parliament more than fifty years each continuously who began in the House and who entered public life under 25.

William Pitt the younger entered the House at 21, was Chancellor of the Ex-chequer at 23 and Prime Minister at 24, and chequer at 23 and Prime Minister at 24, and at 25 was the most popular and powerful Minister of modern times, the greatest subject that England had seen for many generations. He resigned in 1801, after eighteen years of almost absolute power. He died at 47. This great career of a mere boy was no accident. William Pitt was a prodigy, like our Henry Clay, who was rhosen Speaker of the House coincident with his entry into that body and continued to be its Speaker during his entire tenure of about ten years.

American Representatives and Senators

American Representatives and Senators have not the advantage of entering public life at an early age. Under direct constitutional provision they are ineligible until 25 and 36 years old respectively for membership in the House and Senate. Very few, in the prevailing tendency of public opinion, reach the House at 25. Our Representatives, unaided by the divine right of caste, are generally mature men before they arrive.

For instance, the late Justin S. Morrill of Vermont was 44 when elected to Congress in 1854; Senator W. B. Allison, holding the next highest record of tenure, was 33 when elected to the House in 1862. John Sherman was 31 when elected to the House n 1854, the same year Mr. Morrill came lown from Vermont. Their several ages are about the general run of the thousands of Representatives and Senators who have come and gone.

In nearly every House, however, there are two or three young fellows who barely come within the constitutional limit. Several of the constitutional limit. come within the constitutional limit. Several of our most conspicuous statesmen of past times entered the House at about 25. among them John Randolph of Roanoke. John C. Breckenridge of Kentucky, William R. King of Alabama and Richard M. Johnson of Kentucky. All of these subsequently served in the Senate, and all except Randolph were Vice-Presidents of the United States. Breckenridge, afterward a Confederate Major-General and Secretary of War, was one of the defeated candidates for the Presidency in 1800, when Lincoln was elected.

John V. Wright of Tennessee was elected to the House in 1854 at the age of 28 and augustus C. Dodge of lows, afterward Senator, was elected at 26.

Speakers Hunter, Cobb and Grow entered the House at 27; Speaker John W. Taylor at 28, Speakers Polk and White at 29, Speaker Colfax at 31 and Speaker Blains at 22. Speaker Colfax at 31 and Speaker Blains at 22. Speaker Colfax at 31 and Speaker Blains at 32.

Speaker Clay was elected first to the Senate at 29, being under the constitutional

Now the Final Round-Up of USED PIANOS

THE unusual character of the Pianos makes the sale extraordinary. They are all "used" instruments in the sense that they have all been in homes. But many of them are so nearly new that their own makers could not tell them from unused Pianos without examining the serial number. They are in all essentials of musical quality, durability and case finish absolutely new. Yet they are offered for $50, $100, $200 and even more below the regular price. Only unusual conditions could bring such Pianos into a Sale—and those conditions are found in the Loeser Player-

To get one of these instruments, which every one can play either by hand or by aid of the perforated music rolls, people have been willing to sacrifice Pianos that as Pianos were absolutely satisfactory. We cannot keep these instruments here. We cannot even wait for the ordinary course of trade to dispose of them. So we have put them in as fine condition as skill could do-refinished and repolished cases where they needed it-and Various other American political notabilities entered the House at these youthful ages: Francis W. Pickens and Alex. Ramsey at 27; Fernando Wood and Edward McPherson at 28; John C. Calboun, Sam Houston and Stephen A. Douglas at 29; Daniel Webster, Alex. H. Stephens and Roscoe Conkling at 39; John J. Crittenden, Allen G. Thurman, Thomas A. Hendricks and William S. Holman at 31. John H. Ketcham, the record holder of House tenure, was 32 when first elected.

In the Congress just expired there were several members just barely above the constitutional age when first chosen. Morris Sheppard of Texas, the youngest, was a few months over 25 when elected in 1909; John J. Fitzgerald of New York, a few months over 26, and Burton L. French of Idaho, 27.

Senator Joseph W. Bailey of Texas, at 43, has a record of sixteen years consecutive service. Aside from Mr. Bailey. Mr. La Follette is now the only Senator who en-tered Congress under 30. He got into the tered Congress under 30. He got into the House in 1884 at 29, serving six years. La Follette is nine years older than Bailey. Others who entered Congress young are Senators Dolliver and Kean at 30; Elkins and Burkett at 31. Hale at 32, Allison. Car-ter and Long at 34; Cullom and Burrows at 35, Teller and Lodge at 36. Familiarity With Sleeping Cars One Difference Between Them "The average Western girl has travelled so much more than the Eastern girl that I feel like an unsophisticated infant beside her," confessed a young woman with a larful of time tables. "When I say 'travelled' I mean that she has taken longer journeys than we have.

"I'm 25 and I've never been in a sleeping car as a passenger but once in my life. That isn't unusual in the East, either.

"When I graduated from college fourteen of us were invited to a house party in the Adirondacks. The journey would take all night and when we came to talk it over we found that five of the fourteen girls had all night we found that five of the fourteen girls had never taken a trip in a sleeping car. All five were Eastern girls. I was almost the only one from my part of the country that could boast of such an experience.

"I didn't go to the house party, so my only recollection of what the thing is like goes back to when I was a little girl. I'm going to have another sleeping car ride in a month or two, though, and I'm beginning to get ready for it now. My aunt went to Ohio ready for it now. My aunt went to Ohio once and she's going to give me all the hints she can, so that perhaps I won't be spotted for quite such a greenhorn as I am."

Indian's Fondness for Dancing. From the Denver Republican.

Like all the rest of his red skinned brothren. the Crow Indian dearly loves the dance. An Indian will drop his having in the face of a thunderstorm to go to a dance, and a squaw thunderstorm to go to a dance, and a squaw will forget all her hifalutin college education at the prospect of keeping step to the magic heating of those toutoms. The music of the dance represents the summons of the ages—it is the call of the wild which the Indian cannot resist. The best and most industrious succumb to its best and most industrious succume to its wiles.

The Government is trying to stop Indian dancing on all the reservations, for the reason that an Indian will do nothing but dance when he is given free rein. Crops and blooded stock and all the higher ideal of civilization would soon go to snawh on the reservation if the Indians were allowed to dance when and where they pleased. So, beyond a few dances, given at stated intervals, and a big "dance feet" at the time of the annual fair, the Crows have very little of their favorite enloyment, unless one counts the dances that are held on the siy.

125,000 ACRES CUT YEARLY FOR HEATING ROOMS ALONE.

ast Tracts of Country Devoted to Furnishing the Supply-Elaborate System of Water Transportation-Vast Consumption of Pine Wood in the Bakeries. Despite all modern improvements Paris still heats its offices and its houses to a large extent with wood. Its bakers and confectioners use hardly anything else for fuel. It burns up whole forests of timber every year, and extensive forests in several regions of France are reserved for supplying it with fuel. Coal is scarce in France and dear and not of very good quality. Besides, the Parisians are conservative in home matters. The cheery appearance of the glowing log on the hearth appeals to them and most likely generations will pass before they give up urning wood altogether. Although the consumption has declined materially in the last quarter of a century the official figures show that 280,000 cubic metres of hard wood, or nearly 9,000,000 oubic feet a year was the average burning for the first four years of the present century, for heating purposes alone. To furnish this supply about 50,000 hec-ares, or nearly 125,000 acres, of woodland was cleared in the four years. The rate of consumption was even greater in the past. It is not expected that it will diminish. The trees out range in age from 24 to 36 years; the average is about 30 years. From this an estimate may be made of the enormous tracts of land given up to forestation in France for this purpose.

Some of the logs are out near Paris. A good deal comes from woods in the deartments of l'Oise and l'Aisne to the north ind some from Loiret to the south.

The Landes on the southern part of the coast of the Bay of Biscay furnish the pine, which is chiefly in demand among the bakers on account of its quick, hot flare. But the great source of supply for domestic and heating purposes is the forests, or, rather, the woods, of the Morvan, which cover parts of the departments of Zonne and Nièvre. This country is famous for its wild beauty. When seen from one of the lofty hills that are a feature of the region the woods spread in all directions to the limits of sight.

In their billowy surface and variety of green they are often compared to a sea heaving and rolling in tidal waves. But there are no great forest trees. The beeches, oaks, chesinuts and elms which cover the land are never allowed to grow old.

When they are big enough to be burned the woodman's axe is laid to the root and they are laid low in their sturdy youth. The proprietors of the woods make their "furetage," their rummage search, in the autumn. They go through the section selected for the winter's operations, marking the doomed trees.

The cutting begins in December. The men The cutting begins in December. The men live in rude hous that they construct from branches and thatch with leafy twigs.

They cook in the open. Except in the worst weather the huts are only used to sleep in. The life is like that of our own woodines.

As fast as the trees are cut down they are awed into logs about five feet long. They are carried out of the woods on rough carts, plied on wheelbarrows, or even in the arms of men where the surface is impracy table.

for wheels. The destination is the edge of the nearest water course, and there they are built up into great towers by piling them criss-cross until the factors come from criss-cross until the factors come from Paris to buy.

This only happens the following autumn. The wood lies all summer drying and ripening. October is the month of inspection. The sales are made in early November.

There is a firewood fair held at Chateau-Chinon the first Monday in every November. When the sales are made each buyer sends his axemen to chop his special mark on every log of his purchase. This is a most important operation. It is the only way the owner can identify and recover his logs at the other end of the long water journey that they have to make next.

They are simply pushed overboard into end of the long water journey that they have to make next.

They are simply pushed overboard into the watercourse. This is generally swollen by the fall and early winter rains. If it isn't, the water is turned on from ponds and reservoirs, which were dammed up centuries ago and which are meaintained as storage places for this very purpose.

One of these ponds, that of Nettons, is capable of releasing 20,000,000 cubic metres or 700,000,000 cubic feet of water into the River Cure, to drive the logs down stream. The release of water is made on a day agreed upon, and the bank is lined with men who see that logs which run ashore are pushed into the current again and that a clean job is made of it.

The logs sent down the Cure are stopped by a great dam at Clamecy, where the smaller stream enters the Zonne. The surface of the Cure is bidden by the mass of logs. All the men, women and children, practically, get busy on them.

They are handed out of the water, identified by the marks chopped on them, sorted out according to contract and the marks chopped on them, sorted out according to contract and the marks chopped on them, sorted out according to contract and the marks chopped on them, sorted out according to contract and the marks chopped on them, sorted out according to contract and the service of the cure and the marks chopped on them, sorted out according to contract and the marks chopped on them.

They are handed out of the water, identified by the marks chopped on them, sorted out according to owners, and then by very expert rivermen formed into great rafts to continue their voyage to Paris. Each raft contains from 7,000 to 8,000 cubic feet of lumber. They are all launched on the Zonne and, barring rare accidents, reach Paris, about 180 miles distant, in about twelve days.

The pine from the shores of the Bay

The pine from the shores of the Bay line pine from the shores of the pay of Biscay also reaches Paris by water. Railroad transportation is far too expensive. It is loaded on small craft, which ereep along the coast to the mouth of the Seine and up the river to the capital.

and up the river to the capital.

Among the greatest consumers of wood after the bakers are the officers of the national Government. The Ministry of Finance uses about 10,000 cubic feet each winter, so does the Ministry of War.

The Interior uses 5,200 feet, the Department of Instruction, 6,000; Justice, 2,000. The wood is stored in great heaps in woodyards on the banks of the Seine.

There the sawing into usable lengths.

There the sawing into usable lengths is done for private consumers. The Government does its own sawing in the courtyards of the public offices, making provision each summer for the coming winter. The consumption of pine by the bakers is estimated at 10,500,000 cubic feet.

DISASTER POSTAL CARDS. Made From Material That Has Figured in Some Accident.

The disaster postal is one of the latest forms of the souvenir postal craze. It is fashioned from some material which has figured in an accident or calamity and is properly labelied and stated.

The collision off Noyes Beach, by which the steamer Larchmont was lost, furnished number of these cards. They were made of a piece of a sail, cut regulation postal card size, and on the back was printed: Piece of sail from wreck of schooner Harry Knowlton at Noyes Beach, R. I. Wrecked by collision with steamer Larchmont, February 11, 1967."

The cloth was about an eightly or an inch thick and on its face bere the address and the usual stamp. San Francisco and Kingston have furnished any number of these postals. From relirond wrecks have been sant pieces of car cushions or Pullman
